To whom it may concern:

This letter is intended as a reference to Jesse Oldham's building and management skills in the construction industry. I, Jason Hartley of Nice Pipes, have been working closely with and for Jesse Oldham for nearly eight years. I have seen him build spec. homes and manage custom projects while always bringing a thorough understanding of construction techniques and a deep integrity to the job. As far as I know, the quality of his work has never been questioned and he doesn't have any angry customers; which is pretty remarkable considering the number of customers he has had. I have found Jesse to have an excellent understanding of the more scientific aspects of my trade such as, vapour diffusion, soil-gas ingress, building pressurization, and heat transfer/conduction.

As far as project management goes Jesse has always been ahead of the game. I know he spends a lot of after-hours time in the office organizing and planning in order to keep his business running smoothly and his crews on track. His buildings have always gone up quickly and without the disorder and backtracking common on many contractor's sites and I can always rely on him to have the required phases completed and the site clean when it is time for my crew to arrive. I can't speak to his financial competency except to say that I have always been paid within a week of invoicing and I don't bother to collect a deposit with him anymore.

I wholeheartedly endorse Jesse as a competent general contractor and builder and can't see any reason to withhold his certification.
